

EXPOSURE

For the Love of Cutthroats

By Jeremy Allan, Doug Dillingham, Michael Carl, Mark Lance,
Phil Reedy, Steve Schnitzer, and Don Vachini

Reaching great cutthroat waters often means wearing out boot leather, but the scenic rewards are always worth the price of admission. Photo by Don Vachini

The signature bright-orange slash glows on a Lahontan cutthroat caught and released in the Tahoe Basin of California. Photo by Michael Carl

Like all the other subspecies, Bear River cutthroat trout love dry flies—even patterns that imitate mice. Photo by Jeremy Allan